Wellness Living Understanding of Community Expectations and Purpose

Washington College Wellness Housing is a community designed to serve students who are interested and committed in living well. Not only physically but emotionally, socially, intellectually, and spiritually. This includes making positive life choices and abstaining from substance use in the residence hall. This housing option offers a wide variety of specialty programs and opportunities. Residence Life staff, a graduate student who is an advisor to the community and several other key campus resources, assist in the planning of these specialty programs. The students living in Wellness Housing have access to a workout room in the building and a graduate student advisor.
