

June 2012

To Our Newest Washington College Parents and Family Members,

As a parent or a family member, you may be wondering what advice to give as you prepare to send your son or daughter off to college. Anyone following the national news about college students and alcohol may be concerned about this transition. Like you, we, are interested in the safety of your student and want to work with you to reduce high-risk student drinking.

Your assistance in discouraging underage and high-risk student drinking is critical. We urge you to learn about the issues connected to underage/high-risk alcohol use and talk to your student about it. It is important to note that students routinely exaggerate the alcohol and other drug use of their peers. At Washington College, for example, students believe that 99% of their peers drink alcohol, when in actuality, last year after six weeks of classes, 52% of our first year students self-reported as non-drinkers. Research suggests that students, who are highly influenced by their peers, will drink up to what they believe to be the norm. Confronting these misperceptions about alcohol and other drug use is one of the ways to prevent potential abuse.

We have implemented a comprehensive alcohol prevention program to help students make appropriate, safe and healthy decisions. We ask for your support in encouraging your daughter or son's active participation in the alcohol education course. All first-year students are required to take the on-line AlcoholEdu for College and pass the course Final Exam with at least an 85% grade before arriving on campus. AlcoholEdu is an on-line, science-based course used at more than 500 colleges and universities around the country. It provides detailed information about alcohol and its effects on the body and mind. Because it is available online, students need only a computer with Internet access and audio capabilities to take the course. AlcoholEdu empowers students to make well-informed decisions should they be confronted with alcohol related situations.

We invite you to review AlcoholEdu for College material prepared especially for parents and family. On the back of this letter you will find instructions for accessing AlcoholEdu for College, which includes a parent Login ID. The course will be available for students and parents on Monday July 16, 2012. All students must complete the first part of the course through the Exam and Survey 2 by Thursday August 23, 2012. Once students have arrived on campus in the fall, they will receive notification in October to complete the second part of AlcoholEdu; including the Final Exam and Post Survey, by Wednesday October 24, 2012. On the back of this letter is more information about what you can do in coordination with Washington College to address underage and high-risk student drinking. Thank you in advance for working with us to make your student's transition to college life exciting, enriching, and responsible. As always, we welcome your input, and look forward to your student's arrival on campus this fall.

Sincerely,

Beth Anne Langrell
Director of Student Development

Recommendations for the Center for College Health and Safety include:

Set clear and realistic expectations for academic performance.

National studies show that students who drink a lot of alcohol get poor grades. A decline in grades may have as much to do with partying as it does with the difficulty of the academic work. Students who know their family expects sound academic work will be more devoted to their studies and have less time to get in trouble with alcohol.

Encourage involvement in appropriate campus organizations and activities. Helping others or engaging in meaningful extra-curricular activities takes young people outside of themselves, giving them a healthier perspective while structuring their free time with constructive activities to help them grow professionally and personally. Community volunteer work offers students opportunities to make community connections and make a difference.

Beth Anne Langrell, Washington College's Director of Student Development can help students to identify campus and community based volunteer opportunities.

TBA, Washington College's Director of Student Activities, can assist students who are interested in joining clubs, organizations and activities on campus.
